TOKYO -- Sony says it has "highly confident" it can beat rival Nintendo's Switch to release a PlayStation 5 by the end of 2020. Sony Computer Entertainment president and CEO Kazuo Hirai said on Wednesday that he's confident the PlayStation 5 will be released before the end of 2020 and he will not give up on his company's ambitious goal of becoming the world's No. 1 gaming console maker in the next few years. "Of course I'm highly confident," Hirai said in an interview at the Morgan Stanley 2018 Global Technology Conference in San Francisco. Hirai said he has no doubt that the PlayStation 5 will be released next year, because the current Sony's virtual reality game console, Project Morpheus, is still very popular. "The reality is that for the VR to be really good, you have to have a hardware innovation," Hirai said. Hirai was less confident about whether the PlayStation 5 will be released in the fiscal year ending March 2021. "You can say I'm highly confident, but you can also say the sky is blue," he said. "So, we will see." The PlayStation 5, which will replace the PlayStation 4, has been targeted to launch in the holiday season this year. Hir 82157476af
